

“ I wanted to spend my summer in the places where change was not just discussed, but enacted.”

- Sam Weinberg
New York University
Interned at the United Nations

The Simon Wiesenthal Center NextGen Jewish Leaders Program

Host a vetted college intern. Infuse your workplace with new perspectives, energy, and talent.

The Simon Wiesenthal Center (SWC), a global Jewish human rights organization, is seeking government offices, nonprofits and social advocacy organizations interested in hosting exceptional college student summer interns.

You are invited to host an ambitious, vetted intern through SWC's NextGen Jewish Leaders Program: a renowned internship program that gives college and graduate level students their first job experience in the worlds of government, advocacy and social action.

At no cost to your organization, the Simon Wiesenthal Center provides each intern with a $2,150 stipend for successfully completing the internship.

Internship host organizations benefit from the contributions of high-potential students who will support your mission, develop your talent funnel, and bring fresh ideas. In turn, you will see your intern grow as a leader, gain important real-world experience, and sharpen their professional skills.

As a NextGen host, you will:

- Provide a meaningful summer internship for a student for 7 weeks (minimum 3 days per week).
- Offer a practical, hands-on experience that builds and strengthens tangible professional skills.
- Oversee the contributions of the student intern to maximize their impact.
- Benefit from the perspective and productivity of students identified as having strong leadership potential.
- Be recognized publicly for your partnership with the Simon Wiesenthal Center.

Program begins: June 15, 2026

To offer an internship spot, visit:
wiesenthal.org/nextgen

Questions? Contact: information@wiesenthal.com

